THE MINISTER OF HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT (SHRI P. SHIV SHANKER) :

Statement

(a) to (c) It has been well accepted educationally that school education should be in the context of local needs and requirements. Therefore, the curricula, the syllabi and the textbooks for the school stage have been designed by the State Government agencies in different parts of the country. In a diverse country like India where local situations and needs vary substantially from one part of the country to the other, a totally uniform curriculum will be substantially in-appropriate in many parts of the country.

The National Policy on Education-1986 envisages a national system of education based on a national curricular framework which contains a common core along with other components that are flexible. The components of the core curriculam will cut across subject areas and will contain content essential to nurture national identity. The policy envisages that all educational programmes will be carried on in conformity with secular values.

The National Council of Educational Research and Training has developed national curricular frame work for school stage and in pursuance of such framework it has developed curriculam guidelines, syllabi and text-books for different stages of school edcuation. These have been made available to the States also. The States have been urged to use these materials and revise their syllabi and text-books for different stages of school education.
